

Baptist Health camp helps students explore careers

BY STAFF REPORT

Fifteen students had a unique opportunity to explore a variety of healthcare careers during a week-long camp at Baptist Health La Grange. This was the second consecutive year for the healthcare careers camp, which was first held last year as part of the health system's 100 Days of Service centennial celebration. Many students joined the camp with an existing interest in healthcare, and the program helped them explore their passions further through tours of the hospital, demonstrations, discussions with physicians and hands-on educational experiences. "This camp has been an eye-opener for many of these young minds," said Bobbi Smith, human resources manager at Baptist Health La Grange. "By offering them hands-on experiences and direct interactions with healthcare professionals, we hope to ignite their passion and show them the vast opportunities within this field." Campers came from local schools such as Henry County High School, Eminence Independent High School, Immaculata Classical Academy, Oldham County High School, South Oldham High School and the Arvin Education Center. One participant, Abigail Bell, is heading into her junior year at Immaculata Classical Academy. She signed up for the camp to narrow down her interest for a future career. "I learned there's a lot that goes into healthcare. There's many different people who do many different things in many different roles. There's a place for everyone," she said. "I want to be a PA (physician assistant), maybe in surgery or ER. We got to see both of those and it made me love it even more." Many camp participants said the demonstrations and hands-on experiences helped them envision if a healthcare career would be a good fit. The camp included a mock car crash involving multiple first-responder agencies, such as Oldham County EMS, La Grange Fire, La Grange Police, the Oldham County coroner and an air ambulance service. Watching the mock crash helped Estelle Prechtel discover an interest in emergency services she didn't know she had. The rising junior from Immaculata Classical Academy said she wasn't sure about a healthcare career before the camp, but "fell in love with it" after seeing the emergency medical technicians (EMT) in action. "You're the first person on the scene. You're the first person giving them care. There's something really special about that relationship," Prechtel said. Baptist Health La Grange remains committed to nurturing the next generation of healthcare professionals and encouraging local youth to pursue careers in the medical field. In addition to the high school healthcare camp, Baptist Health La Grange is hosting its annual Pre-Med Academy this summer. The academy is a paid internship program for college students to shadow and form mentorships with the hospital's physicians. The camps and academies are designed to help strengthen access to care by growing the workforce. Baptist Health La Grange is working with local schools to launch the Intro to Healthcare Careers program, designed to allow students to explore in-demand specialties through hands-on learning, field trips and discussions with healthcare professionals.
