process, we have been committed to transparency, which is why the lottery process was streamed live and online," Staley said. "The individuals who have come forward to express

'concerns' went through the full process and did not complain until after not being selected in the lottery."

In 2023, the legislature legalized medical marijuana for Kentuckians suffering from chronic illnesses. Last year, the bipartisan House Bill 829 became law and moved up the medical cannabis licensing timeline from January 2025 to July 1, 2024.

During the application period, which was July 1-Aug. 31, the state received 4,998 applications for medical cannabis business licenses, including 918 cultivator and processor applications.

Patients who qualify for medical cannabis are those with a history of post traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), cancer or other approved medical conditions.

The Kentucky Lottery Corporation ran the license lottery.

Beshear said Thursday during his weekly press conference that "more than 12,000 Kentuckians have received a written certification and more than 8,000 have successfully applied for and received a medical cannabis card" since January.

At that same press conference, Beshear also announced that the state had broken ground on its first medical cannabis business, Centaurus Farms in Monticello, which has been designated as a Tier II, 10,000-square-foot cultivator.
