served as the presenting sponsor, while the Hopkinsville and Cadiz rotary clubs sponsored the pianos used during the performance. Brett Pritchett, Rotary youth liaison, said the organization has supported education in the community for decades. The Rotary Scholars Program, launched in 2012, provides two years of tuition-free education at Hopkinsville Community College for graduates of Christian County high schools.

Pritchett said the program helps ensure students have access to higher education opportunities close to home. "Our hope is that students who receive their education here will stay in the community and become part of its future," Pritchett said. He added that Rotary has long prioritized education as part of its service mission. "For more than 75 years our Rotary auction has raised money to help people pursue their educational goals," he said.

Pritchett said supporting local students ultimately strengthens the entire community. "An investment in our young people is an investment in our community's future," he said. Proceeds from the event will help provide textbook assistance and other resources to students pursuing degrees and career training at Hopkinsville Community College.

meeting monthly at noon on the second Friday of each month at the Renaissance Center. Sumner described the group as the arms and legs of the city, with the committee members working to get the job done. "The city is still responsible for the budget," the chairman noted of the funds that support the ham festival. "They are the ones who handle the money." Sumner added that organizers are also interested in volunteers who can help with the annual event, either for a few hours or perhaps during the festival weekend only. Current ham festival volunteers include Gail Cannon, Jack Lingenfelter, Shelley Crawford, Chelsey Redd and Jamie Lewis. Others interested in volunteering may contact Sumner at 270-522-3892.
